

UNION COUNTY STAR & LEWISBURG CHRONICLE--NOV. 25, 1859.

A "Game Dinner."

Shortly after our last War with Great Britain, an Englishman built a residence near Fort George, on the Niagara frontier, and enclosed his grounds with a tight high fence. There was a good understanding between the Americans at Niagara and the British at Fort George, and the men were permitted to pass to and fro occasionally.

Among the American soldiers was one queer chap, who stuttered amazingly, and on a fair day took a boat and crossed to the Canada side to have a hunt. He went over several miles without meeting game, but on his return, seeing a crow on a tree within the high fence of the Englishman, he sealed the fence, fired, and brought the bird down. The owner, Col. ——, witnessed the transaction, and advanced while our soldier was re-loading. The Col. was very wrath, but seeing Yankees stand only with a loaded gun in his hands, he gulped down his anger for a moment, and merely asked him if he had killed a crow? The soldier replied that he had.

"I am sorry," said the Colonel, "for he was a pet. By-the-by, that is a pretty gun—you will be kind enough to let me look at it?" The soldier complied with the request. The Englishman took the gun, stepped back a few paces, and then broke forth in a tirade of abuse, concluding with an order to step down and take a bite of the crow, or he would blow out his brains.

The soldier explained, apologized, and retreated. It was of no use; the Colonel kept his fingers on the trigger, and sternly repeated his command; there was a shot in the Englishman's eye; and the stuttering soldier stooped down and took a bite of the crow, but swallowed it he could not. Up came his breakfast, and it appeared as if he would throw up his tea-tails. The Englishman gaped at the misery of his victim, and smiled complacently at every additional heave. When he had got through vomiting, and wiped his eyes, the Colonel handed him his gun, with the remark, "Now, you rascal, that will teach you how to peacock on a gentleman's enclosure."

The Yankee took his gun, and, stepping back, took deliberate aim at the heart of his host, and ordered him instantly to finish the crow. Angry expostulation, prayers, and entreaties, were useless; there was shoot in the American eye, no help at hand; Bull took his turn at the crow. One bite was enough to send all the good dinner he had lately eaten on the same journey with the garrison fare of the soldier, and, while the Englishman was in an agony of sickness, Jonathan escaped to the American shore.

The next morning, the commandant of Niagara was sitting in his quarters, when Col. —— was announced. "Sir," said the Colonel, "I come to demand the punishment of one of your men, who yesterday entered my premises and committed a great outrage."

"We have three hundred men here, and it would be difficult for me to know who it is you mean," said the officer.

The Englishman described him as a long, dangling, stuttering, stoop-shouldered devil. "Ah! I know who you mean," said the officer, "he is always getting into mischief. Orderly, call Tom."

In a few moments, Tom entered and stood as straight as his natural build would allow, while not a trace of emotion was visible in his countenance.

"Tom," said his officer, "do you know this gentleman?"

"Ye-ye-yes, sir."

"Where did you ever see him before?"

"U-l-l-i," said Tom, stuttering awfully, retaining the grave expression natural to his face, "I di-di-di-dined with-in, yesterday."

We believe Tom was not further punished.—Indiana Sentinel.

A Washington Slaveholder on "Bill Seward."

A recent letter from the city of Washington, says: "I was not a little surprised, as well as amused, to meet on the street a respectable citizen of Washington who chanced to have got a thimbleful of grog down his throat. A knot of good fellows were around him—all politicians, and the exploit of Brown was the talk. Some were terribly severe on Seward, and his irrepressible conflict; when our friend squared off with 'Oh, hang that nonsense. You know, just as well as I do, that it's all humbug.' You know Bill Seward don't go in for such doins. Talk that stuff to somebody besides me!"

The Democratic party persisted in their assertion that Seward's doctrine led to riot and murder—that his Rochester speech provoked the Harper's Ferry rebellion. Our friend replied: "Now, look here—I've got two good niggers at home, and you needn't set me down as an abolitionist. But, I tell you, Seward was right. All he said was, that Slavery would break down before freedom—that it would gradually die out—be crowded out of existence—an' I tell you it's so. You know, as well as I do, that's the current things are taking. We shan't ever see another Slave State, boys, and what's the use of lying about Seward because he tells the truth?"

"I give you this street talk as a sign of the times. I know the man to be a slaveholder, and quite resigned to the idea that slavery must go to the wall, and Mr. Seward, or some other Republican, eventually become President."

It is a Chinese maxim, that for every man who does not work, and every woman who is idle, some one must suffer cold or hunger. Loafers, take notice.
